The image shows a full page of graph paper with a uniform grid of light gray lines forming small squares. On the left side, there is a vertical column of 10 empty circles, one in each row. On the right side, there is another vertical column of 10 empty circles, also one in each row. The rest of the page is empty graph paper.

The image shows a full page of graph paper with a uniform grid of small squares. In the upper-left quadrant, there is a vertical column of 15 empty circles, one in each square of the grid. In the lower-right quadrant, there is another vertical column of 15 empty circles, also one in each square of the grid. The rest of the grid is empty.

This image shows a sheet of graph paper with a grid pattern. There are two vertical columns of 20 empty circles each, positioned in the upper half of the page. The circles are arranged in a grid that follows the grid lines of the graph paper. This layout is designed for a matching exercise where students can draw lines from the circles in one column to the circles in the other.

The image shows a full page of graph paper with a uniform grid of small squares. Two distinct vertical columns of 20 empty circles each are placed on the grid. The first column of circles is positioned along the vertical line at approximately x = 125. The second column of circles is positioned along the vertical line at approximately x = 575. Both columns are perfectly aligned with the grid lines.

This image shows a sheet of graph paper with a grid pattern. There are two vertical columns of 15 empty circles each, positioned in the middle of the page. The circles are arranged vertically, with one circle in each row. The grid lines are light gray and provide a background for the circles.

The image shows a grid of 20 empty circles arranged in two vertical columns of 10 circles each. The circles are positioned at regular intervals along a vertical axis. Each column is aligned with the other, creating a symmetrical pattern. The circles are simple outlines and are set against a background of light gray horizontal and vertical grid lines.

The image shows a full page of graph paper with a uniform grid of small squares. Two distinct vertical columns of 15 empty circles each are placed on the grid. The first column of circles is located towards the left side of the page, roughly aligned with the vertical line at x=100. The second column of circles is located towards the right side of the page, roughly aligned with the vertical line at x=600. All circles are identical in size and are evenly spaced vertically along their respective columns.
